

OPERATION PERFECT MATCH KNOW YOUR BASE BEFORE YOU MARCH

- »» Recon Mission: Assess your skin's undertone (warm, cool, or neutral). Think of it as finding out if your base camp runs hot, cold, or somewhere in between.
- »» Camouflage Check: Test shades on your jawline, not your wrist—because we're blending in with the battlefield (your face), not your supply lines.
- »» Daylight Drill: Always check the match in natural light. Fluorescent bathroom lights are like bad intel—they'll lead you straight into an ambush.
- »» Color Match Arsenal: If it disappears into your skin without leaving a trace, you've got the right weapon in your kit. Anything too orange or too ashy is friendly fire.
- »» Trial by Fire: Don't just swatch—wear it for a day patrol. Some tones oxidize (darken), sneaking behind enemy lines once applied.
- »» Backup Squad: Always keep one shade lighter and darker in reserve, because skin can change tone with the seasons—summer sun = desert camo, winter pale = snow camo.
